- The San Francisco Bay Regional Water Quality Board Overview and Current Focus
Bruce Wolfe, Executive Officer of the Regional Board, in his last appearance before the NBWA before his retirement at the end of the year, presented his perspective on some of the Board’s most pressing issues and work. He began by providing an overview of the roles and responsibilities of the Water Board and the division of responsibilities between the State and the 9 Regional Boards by noting that only the State Board deals with water rights and allocation issues, the Regional Boards focus on implementing the water quality laws and regulations that govern water use in the state.

He covered several Regional Board work areas in his presentation, including work underway to review the Board’s fill policies for the Bay; a re-look at the current dissolved oxygen requirements for Bay waters; a review of ways to better use wastewater to restore and enhance wetlands; the work underway in setting numeric nutrient endpoints [He noted that prior to decades past, nutrients are beginning to be of concern in the bay as the once-turbid waters are clearer now due to the cessation of sediment coming through the Sacramento/San Joaquin river delta from gold mining effects], and noted that there is a review underway of the recreational use [water contact] targets.

Mr. Wolfe also reminded the Board that the much of the mercury standard is related to historic runoff in the gold mining era and he stated that the Board has already applied a risk management approach to mercury in fish consumption from the Bay and that they have very little more it can do with that issue except to wait for the pulse to finally move entirely out of the system. He concluded by noting that the Regional Board is engaged in the ongoing discussions around One Water Bay Area Network and the reminded the Board that the evolution of multi-benefit projects is the end goal now for future water development and treatment efforts.

8. Lori Lewis, the facilitator the NBWA strategic planning effort to commence next month introduced herself and gave an brief outline of what the process she will employ over the next two meetings. She asked the Board for questions that come to mind as we embark on this effort and collected the questions, noting she will use them as guidance and not necessarily answer each one.
